

Smart eyes recognize Laxia

When Zhang Bishi was in Nanyang, he met Laxia, who was still a low-level Dutch officer at the time. The story goes like this: At that time, Zhang Bishi opened a tavern, and when Lahe came to the tavern to drink, he often didn't pay, so the staff got into a fight with him. After hearing this, Zhang Bishi asked the clerk, "What's going on?" The clerk said, "This person always doesn't give him money, so he doesn't give him alcohol." "Let me take a look," said Zhang Bishi. After he came down to look, he whispered to the clerk, "This person has a handsome appearance and doesn't look like the kind of person who defaults on his debts. Give him a drink." Laxia was very strange and said, "What's going on? I want to see your boss." After you came and went, Zhang Bishi and Laxia became good friends.

Later, when chatting with Zhang Bishi, Lahe said, "How much money can you make from this tavern? I'll wash the military uniform bags in my camp for you." Zhang Bishi said, "I don't run a laundry shop." Laxia continued, "You're really not smart. Just transfer it to someone else and make a profit in the middle."

Later, Rajah returned to his home country. A few years later, one day Zhang Bishi suddenly received a letter saying that the Governor General's Office wanted him to go. He felt uneasy and thought he had made some mistake, so he strode to the governor's office without daring to look up. The governor said, "Look up and see who I am?" Zhang Bishi looked up and was first surprised, but later became happy because the person standing in front of him was actually Laxia. Laxia said, "I will entrust you with the management of the mountains, rubber industry, and cultivation land here." Zhang Bishi was very grateful to him. In this way, Zhang Bishi, with the virtue of kindness, righteousness, and integrity, gradually developed with the support of Laxia, and eventually became the richest man in Southeast Asia.